Undercover Job's headquarters has published some bonus materials at a hidden web address. Uncover the following secret will give you the url of this location.
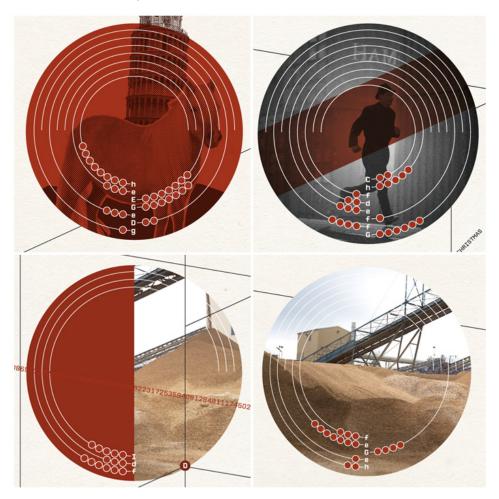

1

You will need these parts of the CD packaging to decode the web address::

› Underneath the transparent CD tray, several HORIZONTAL LINES with CIRCLES THAT CONTAIN LETTERS are visible.

› There is a COPYRIGHT WARNING on the outside edge of the CD label.

› In the booklet there are four circular images. Printed on top of them are LETTERS and uncompleted CIRCULAR LINES, the latter with one or more DOTS on them.

If the CD is put in its tray, you can start to decode the url.

First, turn the CD into a position where the brown-red strip on the top part of the CD aligns with the corresponding strip that is visible through the CD tray (as shown in the first image above). This is position zero.

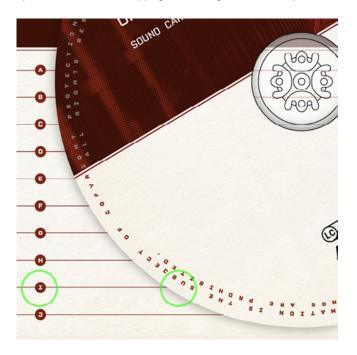

Then, look at the circular image on the inside of the booklet, of which the left half has a solid red-brown colour (on the bottom left in the image above). You will find THREE UNCOMPLETED CIRCLE lines, each of which has several smaller circles (or dots) on it as well as one letter at its base.

To the left of the letter I, five dots are placed on the inner uncompleted circle. This tells you to rotate the CD from position zero TO THE LEFT (OR COUNTERCLOCKWISE) BY FIVE POSITIONS. A position is reached when the thin line underneath the red-brown strip on the CD meets one of the horizontal lines underneath the CD tray.

After rotating the CD, look at the small circles with letters on the outer edges of the horizontal lines underneath the tray. Each of them is labelled with either a capital or a lower case letter. Find the letter that is printed next to the rotation instructions you just used – a capital "I" in our example.

Identify this letter on the small labelled circles underneath the tray and follow the horizontal lines they sit on until they meet the rotated CD. At this spot, you will be able to identify one specific letter of the copyright warning. In this example, it is the letter "U".

Continue doing so with all the other uncompleted circle lines and letters of the booklet. Clues towards the order in which the plain text associated with each of the circular images have to be put together have been posted under News on January 21, 2014, February 27 2014 and March 22, 2014.

The completed plain text reads: URLSLASHFORYOUREYESONTN

This points to the web address www.undercover-job.com/foryoureyesontn

Among others, you will find a comic strip explaining the strange spelling at the end of the web address, in which the letters "nt" are swapped with "ly".

At this address in the right margin, your are asked to "Please log in here". This will lead you to even further bonus material of Undercover Job, but you need a name and a password to access it.

Also in the right margin there are two links leading to parts one and two of the interactive story "Menace to the Airwaves" (the two QR codes on the back of the booklet link to that story, too, by the way). Once you've read both parts of the story, you will know the name and the password that you are being asked for.

The name is: jazzstruction (from „Menace to the Airwaves" Part 1)

The password is: blackkitty (from „Menace to the Airwaves" Part 2)
